

Queen's University's deficit is projected to be $8.3 million for 2009-2010.

Queen's Board of Trustees and Administration act as if employees are to blame.

Here are some facts:

Queen's continues to spend on major building projects without a firm plan to pay for it all.

- $107 million to complete Phase I of the Queen's Centre
- More than $5 million for renovations to Administration Offices
- Almost $2 million still needed for University Avenue

These financial burdens are coming out of the Operating Budget that should be used for the day-to-day running of the university.

Buildings cannot substitute for research and teaching.

Queen's needs professors, librarians and archivists.

The Queen's Board of Trustees and Administration need to rethink their priorities.
